

Rheumatoid Arthritis and Osteoarthritis: Treatment and Management

London, UK
9th–10th June 2010

Description:

This intensive two-day programme will focus on current patient management techniques with a specific emphasis on symptom management and disease modification. Delegates will be introduced to current strategies as well as future directions in pharmacological management and the issues associated with rheumatology clinical trials.

The course begins with an overview of the structural anatomy of joints both in their normal state and when undergoing the inflammatory process. The aetiology and epidemiology of the spectrum of joint diseases will be explored along with their clinical features and presentation.

The programme will encourage delegate interaction and participation especially during the patient presentations, case studies and discussion sessions and highlight the personal impact of these diseases on the patient.

Who should attend?

Healthcare's courses are designed for both medical and non-medical staff within the pharmaceutical industry. This course is suitable for clinical research, medical information, regulatory affairs, biometrics and strategic marketing personnel.
